Anyone who has not visited the Illingworth field, say since their entry into the [Yorkshire] Council, would surely marvel now at the vast improvement that has been effected.

They have faith at Illingworth, the faith that removes mountains, though the transforming of a hilly pasture into a really good cricket field has not been accomplished by just saying “Be thou removed”.

No, they're ALL workers at Illingworth and a real happy family. And “the fair sex” too are no whit behind in their endeavours, as the success of the recently instituted catering department fully testifies.

There's a brotherliness always among cricketers which other sports and pastimes don't seem to quite achieve – or inspire. And nowhere in this district is this spirit more in evidence than on this windswept corner of the hills.
