

THE CHEAP SIDE

Norman Stansfield on changes over time

Things have changed a lot since my early days. There was no bar then and all we had was a small wooden pavilion.

The scoreboard was the tea hut then and there were two gates on the road side through which spectators would enter the ground.

The school end of the ground (above) was known as the 'cheap side'. There was also an enclosure for members and an area in front of the park where spectators would pay extra to watch the game from. So there were three different viewing areas.
