

EXHIBITION LAUNCHED

The 'Industry in Kirklees' cricket heritage exhibition was launched at the Department of Textiles, University of Huddersfield.

THE CRICKET HISTORY OF CALDERDALE AND KIRKLEES

THE CRICKET HISTORY OF CALDERDALE AND KIRKLEES

THE CRICKET HISTORY OF CALDERDALE AND KIRKLEES

THE CRICKET HISTORY OF CALDERDALE AND KIRKLEES

THE CRICKET HISTORY OF CALDERDALE AND KIRKLEES

IDYLLS AND INDUSTRY

RURAL & URBAN

In the 19th century, the green hills of the Yorkshire Dales were a stark contrast to the urban sprawl of the industrial revolution. The rural landscape was a mix of open fields, small villages, and scattered farms.

Cricket was played in the open fields, often on the banks of rivers and streams. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

Recreational activities were often part of the industrial revolution, providing a break from the hard work of the factory. Cricket was a popular pastime, often played on the banks of rivers and streams.

Drinking, gambling, and recreation were all part of the industrial revolution. Cricket was a popular pastime, often played on the banks of rivers and streams. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

Recreational activities were often part of the industrial revolution, providing a break from the hard work of the factory. Cricket was a popular pastime, often played on the banks of rivers and streams.

WEAVERS' GAME

It was a game of skill and strategy, often played on the banks of rivers and streams. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

Probably the best in Calderdale, the river that flows through the town, founded in 1825.

Here in the early 19th century, a group of local farmers began to play with ball and bat.

FACTORIES AND FULL TOSSES

INDUSTRY & CRICKET IN KIRKLEES 1800-2000

But the reality of the industrial revolution was a stark contrast to the idyllic scene. The factories and mills were a source of pollution and noise, and the air was thick with smoke. The game of cricket was often played in the open fields, but the factories and mills were a constant presence.

Bradford, Wily Hill, Huddersfield

Worked in the factories and mills, the workers had little time for recreation. The game of cricket was often played in the open fields, but the factories and mills were a constant presence.

Together with other local pastimes such as football and darts, cricket was a popular pastime. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

Here in the early 19th century, a group of local farmers began to play with ball and bat.

Some businessmen were keen to provide a ground for a professional team, and soon cricket was being played on the banks of rivers and streams. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

But the competitive intensity of football was not all that the 'football' of an industrial revolution was about.

The result was a game that was played on the banks of rivers and streams. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

LASKFIELD HALL

1825-1828

CENTENARY

And instead of being torn off, the only of the most popular of the cricket ground. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

These days, the game is played on the banks of rivers and streams. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

BORN LEADERS

THE CRICKET HISTORY OF KIRKLEES

Cricket was a popular pastime, often played on the banks of rivers and streams. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

Here in the early 19th century, a group of local farmers began to play with ball and bat.

Cricket was a popular pastime, often played on the banks of rivers and streams. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

After all, the first full-time professional cricket team was formed in 1877. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

Cricket was a popular pastime, often played on the banks of rivers and streams. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

After all, the first full-time professional cricket team was formed in 1877. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

OPENING UP

THE CRICKET HISTORY OF KIRKLEES

Cricket was a popular pastime, often played on the banks of rivers and streams. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.

Cricket was a popular pastime, often played on the banks of rivers and streams. The game was a mix of traditional and modern, reflecting the rural and urban influences.