

Holmbridge CC by Daniel Stewart

Holmbridge Cricket club nestles next to the woods on one side that appear to dwarf the pavilion and the grounds. On the other side, however, are homes which are built into the hill on terraces creating an almost manmade cliff which dominates the views from the other side of the ground, the result of which is that Holmbridge feels like it is in a gully or valley, therefore making the ground feel intimate and protected. Around the club run thick sandstone walls that again make the place feel enclosed and protected from the outside world. These walls also make the space more intimate.
